"Throughout my working life, I have fought with and on behalf of local people to secure affordable housing, provide local amenities and champion participation in democracy. I want everyone to have an affordable space of their own, in the place they want to live; to earn a living wage, to live in dignity and to provide food on their table."

Interviews / articles on-line include:

"I have been on the Executive previously, twice as Deputy Leader, as Cabinet member for community engagement, the environment and have been involved in planning and urban design for many years. These areas of interest demand a collaborative approach and define the way I work (also culminating in my contribution to The Design Companion for Planners and Placemakers published by RIBA this year). I raised two children, live in a council home, never went to university and I'm not male."
